Parade marches to town

Decades-old West Sac tradition brings floats, music & horses this Sunday

It's that time of year again.

The 23rd annual Community Day Parade, sponsored by the West Sacramento Chamber of Commerce, will kick off at 1 p.m. this Sunday, Oct. 4, from West Capitol Ave. just east of Harbor Blvd. Floats, bands, horses dancers (and of course, political candidates) will proceed east to a reviewing stand in front of Raley's on West Capitol, and the parade will end in the West Sacramento Land Company parking lot near West Capitol and Jefferson.

Good viewing may be found along West Capitol Ave. between Harbor and Jefferson.

This year's parade theme is "Show Your Spirit." The grand marshal chosen will actually be the entire "Volunteers in Policing (V.I.P.)" unit which helps out the West Sacramento Police Department. The V.I.P.s will ride along in one or two vehicles during the parade.

The parade will begin assembling at 11:30 a.m. at the stagint area. For information, call the chamber at 371-7042.

The West Sacramento Elks Lodge at 1020 West Capitol Ave. will hold a pre-parade community breakfast beginning at 8:30 a.m. on Sunday. French toast and chicken fried steak will be on the $3.50/person menu. For information on the breakfast, call the lodge at 372-2980; Gary Wiese, 371-7122; Jesse Orta, 372-7470, ext. 2; or Terry Warford, 929-7323.

Candidates' forum next week

The West Sacramento chapter of Soroptimist International has stepped to the plate to organize a local political candidates' forum next Thursday, Oct. 8, beginning at 7 p.m. in the West Sacramento City Council Chambers, 2101 Stone Blvd., second floor.

Soroptimist organizers said that the event will include a chance for each candidate for office to make a brief statement, as well as an opportunity for them to answer questions. The event will be moderated by Charles Buchanan, a local teacher who is affiliated with the Soroptimist organization..

The evening will begin by featuring the two candidates for Yolo County Sheriff/Coroner, followed by the four candidates for West Sacramento City Council and then the 11 candidates for Washington Unified School District school board. The organization is in the process of contacting all 17 candidates. For more information, or to receive information on behalf of one of the campaigns, call Nat Lopez at 371-4268.

The candidates' forum is the only such forum currently planned for the local November ballot.

TWO FOR THE COUNCIL

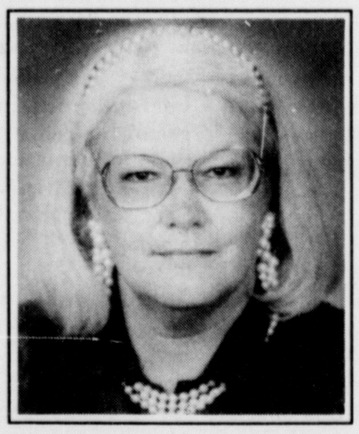
News-Ledger chats with city council candidates Marna Miller and Christopher Cabaldon

Marna Miller

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Marna Miller, who brought her outspoken style to the West Sacramento City Council race in 1996, is back on the ballot for one of the two council seats up for grabs in November.

Miller bridles at the label "activist."



"An activist connotes an imbecile with only one thing on the agenda," she commented in an interview this week. "I am a taxpayer advocate. I am not unreasonable; I am persistent."

Miller, 53, worked in the Southern California aerospace industry. Following an auto accident which put her into a wheelchair, she moved to the West Sacramento area to start a new life, and met her current husband.

"We moved to the Vacation Inn when we first came here," she recalled, citing the crime-troubled motel on Merkley Ave. which has since been taken over by the city and levelled to make room for a seniors' complex. "I had my baptism in 'yuck.' We had to call the cops a few times."

Miller became a homeowner in the Meadowdale area and became involved in community issues in the Maple/Holly area, where her church is located.

"My involvement kind of snowballed. It was a case of if you can, you do."

One of her key motivations is stopping what she sees as government waste and misuse of public money. Miller is involved in an organization called Californians Against Redevelopment Tax Abuse, which she describes as a number of groups and politicians banding together, including such anti-tax crusaders as Gann and Jarvis.

"I would like to get rid of them," Miller says of redevelopment agencies. "In a perfect world, I could use redevelopment to its best ability. But in an average town, politicians get involved and get the perks. Redevelopment could be a good

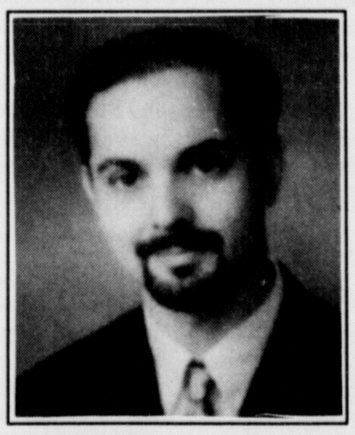
Christopher Cabaldon

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

After winning a chance to fill the remaining two years of Roland Hensley's city council seat after Hensley stepped down in 1996 due to health concerns, Christopher Cabaldon will go back on the ballot this November to ask West Sacramento for a four-year term.



At 32, Cabaldon is now being confirmed by the governor in his appointment to vice challenger of the state's community college system. But time spent as a lobbyist and legislative staffer in the state capitol helped shape his political philosophy -- and his affection for local government.

"One of the things I like about city government is the things other people might call mundane," he said in an interview this week. "If people say they need a stop sign to slow traffic, you make a decision, and the sign goes up. It's real in a way state politics isn't."

The politics and bureaucracy behind state lawmaking has turned Cabaldon, a Democratic party official, away from higher office -- at least for awhile. In 1996 he told the News-Ledger he would not run for higher office; he now says he won't run anytime soon.

"It would have to be a lot of years after I left the capital before I have any interest in that," he commented. "It's too abstract" at that level, he added.

A single, Westmore Oaks are resident, Cabaldon grew up in Los Angeles and attended UC Berkeley, majoring in environmental economics. He was involved in student government and later worked as the students' capitol lobbyist. He then started a career as a legislative staffer, serving as staff director for the assembly's higher education committee for much of the time.

After spending two years on the council, Cabaldon reports that the city's finances continue

Local student lands intern slot with Channel 10 news

By Daryl Fisher
Features Editor

News Anchor JENNIFER SMITH with LETICIA VALENZUELA

For two weeks this past July, River City High School junior Leticia Valenzuela got to see just what it's like to be a news anchor person at a major metropolitan television station.

"I was one of two students chosen by Mr. Engoron (River City High School English and drama teacher Roy Engoron) to be an intern at Channel 10," explained Leticia. "It was really something to see how news programs are actually put together. I didn't realize how much hard work goes into getting the news ready for the noon and evening broadcasts. Since I plan on majoring in broadcast journalism when I go to college, the time I got to spend at Channel 10 was really very valuable to me."

A typical day for Leticia at Sacramento's Channel 10 television station began around 8:30 a.m. in the news room.

"I got to sit with the reporters as they prepared their stories," said Leticia. "They have computers which have stored up most of the information they need and after they look through all the important news of the day, they type up what they're actually going to say in front of the cameras."

Leticia was surprised at how much time the Channel 10 personnel were willing to spend with her.

"These are very busy people," said Leticia, "but they all went out of their way to help me understand just how broadcast journalism works. They not only showed me how they write their stories, but they also showed me how to edit film, read a television prompter, and do an on-camera interview. By the time my two weeks were up, not only was I sure that I wanted to have a career in broadcast journalism, but I had also been made to feel like I was part of the Channel 10 news team."

Leticia especially enjoyed the hands-on-experience she got when she was allowed to sit at the Channel 10 news desk and read from the television prompter the same news which had just been broadcast to the greater Sacramento area.

"It was actually like I was doing the reporting myself," recalled Leticia, "and it really gave me a good feel for what it's like to be a television news anchor person. The real reporters would listen to me and tell me what I was doing right and what I was doing wrong."

Most of all, Leticia enjoyed the time she got to spend with Channel 10 news personalities Jennifer Smith, Dan Eliott, Tom Lang and Doug Miller.

"All four of them are very professional people," said Leticia, "but they are also very down-to-earth, too. It was the first time I had ever been around anyone who is even remotely famous, and they went out of their way to make me feel like I was just one of the gang. When I drop by the studio to visit them now, they all want to know how I'm doing and I just want them to know how appreciative I am for all the good advice and encouragement they gave me."

Leticia plans on majoring in broadcast journalism at California State University at Chico in the fall of 2000.

Yolo Co. Sheriff/Coroner lists cause of death for inmate at jail

The Yolo County Coroner's Office announced last week that natural causes killed a 41-year old man who died in custody at the county jail Sept. 5.

An enlarged heart was the cause of death, said the coroner's office, with morbid obesity and fatty liver disease contributing to the fatality of inmate Robert Tavalaro of Sacramento.

'Friends' book sale raises a cool grand for West Sac library branch

From Phyllis Runyan
The East Yolo Friends of the Library

Sales of $1,068 made the September 1998 book sale a big success. A big crowd was waiting at the door, and a steady stream of customers carried away armloads, bagloads and boxloads of books. Good prices and quality books make the sale an exciting community event.

Thanks go to all the people working on the sale. Thanks also go to the News-Ledger for pre-sale publicity, and to Ramco Enterprises for their cooperation.

The next sale is scheduled for Jan. 16-17, 1999. Donations of books are accepted year-round at the library and are tax-deductible.

The coming week in local government

A meeting of the West Sacramento Housing Advisory Commission will be held at 6 p.m. on Oct. 5 at City Council Chambers, 2101 Stone Blvd.

The draft agenda for the event lists for consideration proposed changes to housing rehabilitation guidelines and review of the property management guide, with respect to the Community Development Block Grant program and the city's rehabilitation program.

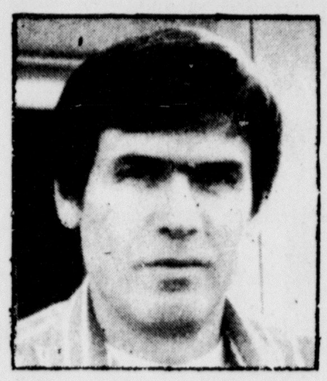
Did you know that cockroaches can get into your ears?

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

A week ago tonight, I leisurely drove home from a friend's house, swung my truck into my driveway, turned off the engine, pushed open my door, and was about to slide out from behind the steering wheel when my twenty-something daughter suddenly appeared right in front of me.

"What's the matter?" I quickly asked her, having often seen that 'You're in big trouble now' look in her eyes in the past.

"Sometimes I just don't believe the things you do, Dad," she said with emphasis.

"What now?" I asked, hoping for the best.

"It's that stupid newspaper column of yours again."

"Which one?"

"The last one!"

"And what did I say that was so bad this time?"

"You really don't know, do you?"

"No," I admitted.

"You told the whole town mom is scared of spiders!"

"Oh, that," I said, relieved that I hadn't really screwed up big-time again.

"Why in the world did you do that?" she demanded.

"Because it's true -- and it was kinda funny how mom trashed our whole bed the other night looking for a poor little scared spider that ended up running up her leg."

"But it just reinforces another stupid male stereotype about women being the weaker sex."

"Hey, now I didn't say one single thing about one of the sexes being weaker than the other," I assured my daughter. "Plus I don't think it's any big deal that mom is afraid of spiders anyway. You're afraid of cockroaches, and I don't hold that against you."

"Just how did you know I'm afraid of cockroaches?" she wanted to know.

"Well, mom told me about that time at work when one was under your desk and how after you had finally stopped screaming, you called building security to get rid of it."

"I did not call building security," she quickly corrected me. "I called building maintenance. Besides, cockroaches are a lot different than spiders."

"How so?"

"Cockroaches are absolutely disgusting!"

"Oh."

"Just what did mom tell you anyway?"

"Well, only that you refused to go back to work until they had killed the cockroach."

"You should have seen that awful looking thing," she said, her face wrinkling up as her thoughts returned to that terrifying moment in time when she first saw the cockroach at her feet. "It freaked out when it realized I was looking at it," she continued, "and it had a really defined face, too, just like those ones on the Raid commercials. Anyway, it froze for a moment, then it reared up on its hind legs and began waving its nasty little antennae back and forth at me. Those ugly things had to be two inches long. And the cockroach itself was huge! Plus it was shiny, with an auburn covered back and gross little hairs all over it. Just looking at it made me want to throw up."

"What did the security guy say when he arrived on the scene?" I asked.

"He was so condescending," said my daughter, "just like all men are when it comes to women being scared of things."

"What did he say?"

"Well, he had a big flashlight in his hand and he said, `Are you the young lady who wants me to kill a bug for her?"

"What did you say?"

"I told him it wasn't just a little bug -- it was the biggest, grossest cockroach I had ever seen!"

"Did he find it and kill it for you?"

"No, and to tell you the truth, I think he was more scared of the darn thing than I was. And I don't blame him. I read the other day that people who have cockroaches in their houses often wake up in the morning with the darn things in their ears. I guess cockroaches like warm, moist places, and they will actually go so far down into people's ears that the person has to have a special operation to get it out. Can you even imagine that?"

"You know, that's really interesting," I said with sincerity. "Do you think it would it be okay if I talked a little about cockroaches in my next column?"

"Absolutely not!"

Chamber, city will show off developments to real estate pros

From Art Schroeder
Community Relations
Redevelopment &
Housing Agency
City of West Sacramento

On Thursday, Oct. 8, commercial real estate agents and brokers from all over Northern California are converging in West Sacramento for a special tour of major developments throughout the city.

"West Sacramento On the Go" will showcase current opportunities for companies to expand or relocate. The guided tour will begin and conclude at The Money Store building, a relocation success story generating wide interest in the riverfront area. Other stops featured on the tour are Riverside Centre, Southport, the Triangle, Riverpoint, and the central business district.

More than 50 area businesses have lined up to sponsor "On the Go," which is produced by the West Sacramento Chamber of Commerce. The event features a trade show, a catered lunch, and a keynote address by Peter Thompson, regional vice-president of Spieker Properties on the role of real estate investment trusts in today's market. "On the Go" is expected to attract nearly 500 key real estate professionals from the region, who view West Sacramento as an emerging commerce center.

During the 1990s, West Sacramento has gained more jobs than any city in the region, according to a 1998 report from the Sacramento Area Council of Governments. With companies like Pacific Bell, PG&E, and The Money Store recently relocating or expanding in West Sacramento, the local work force increases, creating new customers for local services and stimulating interest in housing opportunities. This kind of momentum can lead to increased retail and commercial services benefitting the entire community.

Tickets to "West Sacramento On the Go" cost $45 per person and can be purchased through the West Sacramento Chamber of Commerce at 371-7042.

Vanden beats RCHS, league game is ahead

The River City High School varsity football team lost to Vanden last Friday night, 19 to 7.

Vanden scored first on a 1-yard run and kicked the extra point to lead, 7 to 0. In the second quarter, RC's Malcom Floyd broke 4 tackles and scored on a 90-yard run and Morton Geivett kicked to tie, 7 to 7. In the third, Vanden scored on a 3-yard pass and kicked to lead, 14 to 7. RC was forced back on the kick off and had to punt. The punt was blocked into the end zone, and Vanden recovered for a safety to lead, 16 to 7. In the fourth, Vanden kicked a field goal to end the scoring at RC 7, Vanden 19.

Sports Insider

By Richard Novoa

The Big Mac show has finally come to a close for the 1998 season.

Mark McGwire finished the season in grand style before his home town crowd of 46,110 by hitting his 69th and 70th home run of the season! In a baseball season fans will never forget, McGwire and Sammy Sosa accomplished what only two players in Major League history had did before. Before this year only two men had ever hit 60 home runs: Babe Ruth in 1927 and Roger Maris hit 61 in 1961. McGwire, who will celebrate his 35th birthday Thursday, hit 70 HOMERS off 66 different pitchers but it will be Montreal's rookie Carl Pavano who will go down in the history books as the pitcher who Big Mac took deep for NO.70! Let's not forget about 29 year old Sammy Sosa, who actually held the home run lead for 45 minutes Friday night, when he hit No.66.

The pennant races are all set with the exception of the N.L. wild-card race. The Giants trailed the Cubs and Mets by 5 games with only 10 games left in the season. The Giants won nine out of their last 10 games to push the Cubs into a one game playoff. In the final game of the season last Sunday the Cubs and Giants both lost, but what I found amazing was in the way they lost. The Giants blew a seven-run lead to Colorado but were still winning the game 7-6 before Giants bad-boy Julian Tavares gave up a seventh inning two run homer. Jeff Kent came to the rescue in the eighth with a solo HR that tied the score but in the ninth inning Sosa's buddy from the Dominican Republic, Neifi Perez, hit a lead off home run just 30 seconds after the Giants had found out that the Cubs had lost in extra inning in Houston. The Cubs and Giants (89-73) will play a one game playoff on Monday night (at press time) in Chicago.

The good news (at press time) is the Giants still have a chance to win the 1998 World Series but the bad news is the winner will have to play the Braves, in the best of five series, starting on Wednesday in Atlanta! In the other divisional matchups starting Tuesday, the Red Sox are at Cleveland, San Diego are in Houston and Texas is at New York.

The Yankees are too strong for the Rangers and will win in 4 games. Cleveland will beat Boston 3 games to 1, while the Padres and Astros will go down to the wire with the Astros winning 3-2. The only upset I seeing the making is the winner of the Cubs vs Giants series beating the Braves 3 games to 2!

In the NFL last week I picked two more winners (Raiders +4, and 49ers -10) (7 wins- 3 losses) but the News-Ledger had to go to press early this week so my weekly Monday night pick (Tampa Bay) will be added to the total next week.

In week 5, I like the 49ers(-10) in Buffalo and I also have a wild pick for you. The Redskins (+3) will win their first game of the year at home against the struggling Dallas Cowboys. For my weekly Monday night pick take the 4-0 Vikings (+7) as they battle the 4-0 Green Bay Packers for the Central Division lead.

See ya next week!!

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial:

The Power of One

This week, school board candidate Ed Hocking has apologized to board member Ardeene Westvik for having held her responsible for some abhorrent actions made by other board members late last year during the fiasco which followed the short-lived appointment of Juan Barcenas to a vacant seat on the board.

This raises an interesting issue.

Just what is the duty of a minority board member, whose vote often doesn't count, when other members of the board are behaving badly?

Too often, a "lone voice" on a school board or city council will be silent during controversy, assuming that because his or her vote won't change anything, speaking up won't change anything either. But that is an abdication of responsibility.

When one school board member solicited local television coverage, cynically telling news stations that certain people who questioned the Barcenas appointment were doing so only because they were racists, that was detestable. When another member of the board majority went to a local city official and told him that there would be political repercussions if one of the official's employees continued to be politically active in campaigning for the Barcenas board seat, that was also clearly wrong.

Both actions raised legal questions. Yet when it came to ethics, there was no question -- these actions had no place among those whom we elect to govern.

You didn't hear this in any strong or meaningful way from the rest of the school board.

Those in leadership positions have a duty to speak out even when they are in the minority -- especially when they are in the minority -- if something is rotten. Each of the other board members should have denounced these acts and called for a school board censure of these acts. In many other communities, the fallout would have been worse -- board members may have lost their posts or at least invited a lawsuit from the injured parties.

That a censure would have failed to garner a majority vote (the offenders were part of a cohesive majority voting bloc) is irrelevant. What the call for censure would have done is send the message that both playing the race card and interfering with a city employee's rights were wrong, according to the standards of at least some members of the school board, and of at least some members of the community. Because this didn't happen, we as a community instead sent the message that this kind of conduct fits within our standards.

Sometimes it is possible for a minority member of a school board or other governing body to exert a positive influence just by protesting wrongs, publicly asking questions, and dragging matters into the light which their opponents in the voting majority would rather keep in the dark. Just ask Greg Potnick or Wes Beers, who played this role early in their careers on the West Sacramento City Council, or Daryl Fisher or other former members of the city council or local school board, who also learned what it means to be the "loyal opposition."

It means speaking up and speaking out.

The Green What?

Here we go again, we are one city that does not learn from its mistakes. The city owns a big portion of West Capitol Avenue because of stupid acquisitions, but lo and behold when we need property for a city hall we barter with a couple of well known developers; a trade of properties it is called. We do not fare well with real estate transactions, i.e. Broderick Market, City Hall, etc.

The sensible thing to do is build city hall on property already owned by the city. But this makes sense so is therefore unacceptable. We will undoubtedly trade for the property and once again end up with the "Green Wienie."

CHUCK KING

Pro Beers & Cabaldon

I would like to give my support to the present Mayor Wes Beers and also to Chris Cabaldon.

I have been going to the city council meetings since we became a city. I have seen the positive plans and work that has helped us to improve our city. I would like to see it continue with the same people we have now. We have made great steps in going forward to become a premiere city. I would like to keep it that way. Why go backwards with new people? Like the saying goes, if it's not broke, why fix it?

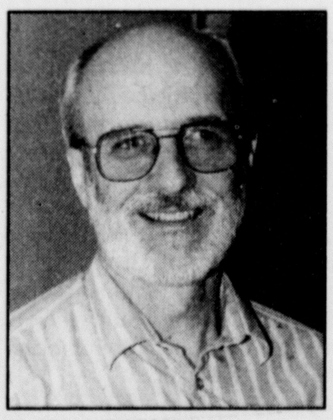
Library funds

Dennis Main's letter ("Remember the Library's Needs," Sept. 23, News-Ledger) urges the city to help in expanding the library as part of the new civic center, even while he recognized that the library is a county facility.



JOHN SIDEN

The East Yolo Friends of the Library knows the need for expanding the library. The state must provide bond funds in the future (there aren't any now), and there may be some money from development fees, but at this time it will take local action, either by city government or city residents taxing themselves, to obtain needed library buildings (and expanded services) for the future. The Davis library, for instance, was able to triple in size as a result of a successful Mello-Roos parcel tax approved by voters in that city.

The library is starting to take a serious look at its current and future needs, and there will be wide community input into this process. The EYFOL welcomes the help of library users such as Mr. Main, as well as that of city government. It will take all of us working together to realize the dream.

JOHN SIDEN, President
East Yolo Friends of the Library

Define 'is'

After viewing the testimony of "The Great Prevaricator" yesterday morning, it is painfully clear that the Lewinsky matter is only the first shoe to regarding matters other than those in this first report from Starr, and, in my opinion, more are forthcoming. Of all the complicated answers, to all the questions in all the investigations, we can't even get a straight answer to "Who hired Bruce Lindsey," let alone, "...define is." It's a wonder we weren't subjected to "Define Oath." Clinton takes evasion to a new level. I'm just not certain as to whether that level would be best described as up or down. Since Monica was only the vessel, I think the term "Prevarigate" better fits the true nature of the possibly impeachable offenses committed in the name of protecting "My Family, Myself, and 'Others,' from embarrassment." (Define "Character".)

The institutions of our country are stronger than Clinton's ego, and, I believe, they are infinitely more important. Truly great presidents are remembered for their passion and commitment to ideals and institutions greater than themselves, not for lying about their inability to contain their baser instincts. Great leaders, lead. They do not hand down "Edicts from on high," they build consensus. Clinton seemingly rules by decree, daring congress to veto his endless executive orders. A Predictably elitist, "Do as I say, not as I do" liberal.

Correcting Mr. Hocking

I feel I need to correct a statement made by Mr. Hocking in a recent interview (News-Ledger, Sept. 23). Since I am aware that teachers are working very hard to improve the achievement of our students, the statement that "test scores in reading and math seem to be consistently dropping" is incorrect and is an affront to the staff. The fact is that when you compare English speaking students, which are the only students tested in 1997, to English students tested on the SAT 9 in 1998, you find that test scores in both reading and math have gone up in all grade levels. In addition, when only reading comprehension test scores are compared, all grade levels demonstrated improvement.

Ardeene Westvik

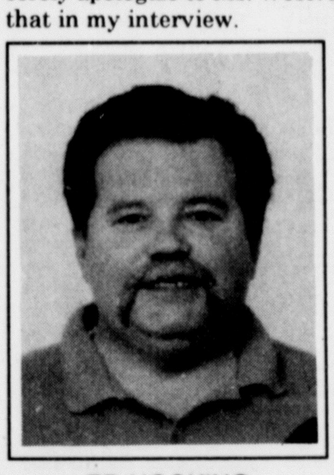
Test scores are not as high as I or any of the board or staff would like to see them, but they are not consistently dropping as stated by Mr. Hocking.

ARDEENE J. WESTVIK
Board of Education Member
Washington Unified School District

Apology, clarification & comment

Having just reviewed the results of a telephone interview conducted September 21 and published in the September 23 edition of this newspaper (News-Ledger),I would like to make a correction to one item.

The article gave the appearance that the entire school board (except Dave Farmer) falsely accused me of being racist, and circulating a petition to recall Mr. Barcenas. Ardeen Westvik did therefore, I don't believe Ms. Westvik participated in the spreading of the false information. I sincerely apologize to Ms. Westvik for not including that in my interview.



ED HOCKING

I know some will challenge the test scores I spoke of. They came from the "State of the District Report, 196-97." This was given to me by the district. However, the best test of any of these scores, should be the number of our graduates attending or qualifying for CSU and UC systems.

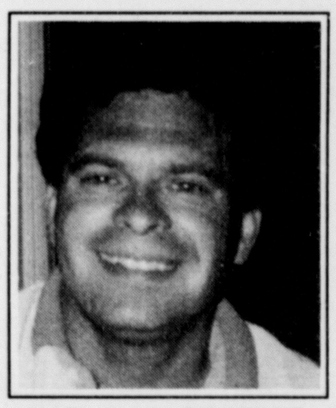
I believe the interview spoke to the work I do in this district, and the way I campaign. I also found it interesting that one can disavow writing letters to the editor, while writing letters to the editor.

EDWARD "ED" HOCKING
West Sacramento

No conflict of interest

As a member of the recently appointed School Bond Task Force and a candidate for the two-year seat on the Washington Unified School Board; I feel I must respond to both Mr. Hocking and the community. I feel serving on the School Bond Task Force and running for the W.U.S.D. Board shows commitment, dedication and an interest in the future of West Sacramento, not conflict.

I was a member of the Long Range Facilities Task Force. We had people from all over the community of West Sacramento. This included people who lived here and people who are heavily involved in West Sacramento, but happen to live some place else. I'm proud of the fact that people who lived elsewhere were willing to put in the time and effort to serve West Sacramento.



KARL MACHSCHEFES

I'm also proud to be a member of the School Bond Task Force. We have a high quality Task Force assembled. We have people primarily from West Sacramento but we also have other willing to put in the time to our community, I appreciate that. Rob Corley for example is the coordinator of our Task Force. As an outsider he stays above the local political arena, and as a professional he provides the Task Force with guidance, experience, and insight. Rob Corley is a professional who help successfully guide the Long Range Facilities Task Force and will do the same with the School Bond Task Force.

I'm also proud of the many friends and colleagues of mine who are members of the School Bond Task Force. Some of these people I worked with on the Long Range Facilities Task Force such as Bill Kristoff, Ken Whittemore and Alex Sameryak; others I have known as friends in the community for a long time such as Mike McGowan, Melody Bosley, and Joe Goeden. Then there are the people I have become acquainted with while being involved with the various schools in W.U.S.D., such as Irene Eklund, Dave Farmer, Diane Smith, Josie Andre, and Estella DeLaTorre. These people and the others on the Bond Task Force are all people with a genuine interest in West Sacramento and our school system. They all deserve a commendation or their dedication to our children.

As a candidate for the Washington Unified School Board, I can think of no greater service to the people of West Sacramento and our children, then to help us pass a School Bond in 1999. I can help by serving on the School Bond Task Force and by serving on the School Board. I'm appointed to the School Bond Task Force and am proud I can serve with the distinguished members of the Task Force. It will up to the voters this November whether I will also serve as a member of the W.U.S.D. Board. I will do my part since West Sacramento is my adopted home town, and W.U.S.D. is the school district both of my children go to.

There is no conflict of interest. I have dedication, commitment and a personal interest; my city and my children.

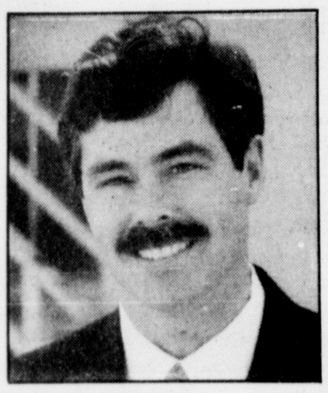
Cahill discusses Frugoli

In my campaign for City Council, I have found many supporters and friends. Often, they are concerned about retribution from the incumbents for opposing them. One who has not been afraid to speak up is Vincent Frugoli. As in many past elections, Mr. Frugoli is exercising his right to free speech, albeit with more vigor and passion than many people. While his actions may be in support of me, they are in no way a part of my organized campaign for office. He has formed a separate, legal organization which acts independently of my campaign. It is not responsible to me, nor am I to it. I do appreciate this support, as I appreciate the support of many residents of West Sacramento and like them, I share some of Mr. Frugoli's views. We also disagree on many things, but always with mutual respect. I owe Mr. Frugoli only what I owe any other resident: the obligation to always listen respectfully to citizen concerns, to openly state my positions on issues and to have the willingness to discuss or defend them whenever asked.



JIM CAHILL

Although I'm glad that both the reclusive Mr. Beers and the elusive Mr. Cabaldon chose to reply to your paper, I was disappointed that neither felt any obligation to answer the charges levied against them by two of their constituents. Neither chose to truly address the concerns of the residents to whom they were replying, but instead sought to throw doubt and mistrust upon the motives of these citizens. Regrettably, both incumbents list City Hall as their address and phone number, preventing an ordinary citizen from reaching them directly. In contrast, I invite them, or anyone else, to telephone me at any time at 371-1311 to discuss any issue directly with me.

I want both of the incumbents to know that neither Mr. Frugoli, nor Mr. Resendez misstated facts in their letters, nor is anyone trying to "buy" an election. The only truly "special" interests at stake in this election are the financial backers of Mr. Beers and Mr. Cabaldon who come from outside our city and who represent large development interests, not the public interest. Of course, neither addressed this issue in their statements. One wonders what Mr. Cabaldon owes the Sacramento Building Trade Association, or what Mr. Beers owes to his big developer friends. Based on the recent City Hall deals, it's likely they are already paying on these debts.

At a time when national politicians prove so disappointing, it is especially troubling to see the blatant disrespect for residents the incumbents have displayed. They select only those facts they feel justify their actions, without revealing the whole story. Mr. Beers shuts his ears to the concerns of citizens as he pursues a "Premier City" no one can define, while Mr. Cabaldon makes no genuine explanation of an abrupt reversal of his pledges to be independent, to not take PAC money, and to not take contributions over $100.00.

Each incumbent ignores the need to rehabilitate our neighborhoods and business districts, paying only lip service to the idea while building more and more low income housing. Each has underestimated the tolerance of voters and overestimated their ability to conceal damaging facts. In actuality, their fundraising efforts in Elk Grove, Natomas and Sacramento make them more than just financially competitive. They ;make them the best financed special interest candidates in our brief history and put them in a better position than anyone to "buy" an election. Their record, which cannot be concealed, is one of bureaucratic disrespect for citizens. The residents of West Sacramento know this, and will take that knowledge to the polls.

Frugoli rebuts mayor's comments

This serves as my response to Mayor Wes Beers. I was pleased that you spent a few hours of your time to answer my letter. When my commercial property was going through the process of being down zoned I called you so many times and you never had the courtesy to return my calls. Three months ago the Planning Commission approved an increase of commercial property in this very location. It came back the next week to the City Council that an EIR and a Traffic Study needed to be done. After much discussion the City Council took a vote. You Mr. Mayor and Councilmen Cabaldon felt I should pay for the studies, while Councilmen Kristoff and Councilmen Montemayor felt this was unfair because the City was the one that had changed the zoning in the first place. It seemed wrong that I should pay between $15,000.00 and $20,000.00, to get back what I already had. The vote came up and it was a tie. My property is in limbo. If you were honest as you claim in your response letter to me, you should of stepped down and abstained from the vote. Your family owns 5 acres to the south of this property and this could be a conflict of interest.

During the eight years you have been an elected city councilmen we have never spoke a private word to each other. I have spent 100's of hours in front of you at the city council meetings begging, bellyaching and complaining. You listen patiently, I thank you for that but, tell the truth you never intended to hear anything I said.

The Mello-Roos I'm forced to pay is $100.00 per acre forever. When does this bond retire? If you ask City hall they will tell you they do not know. I'm paying $17.00 per day, why don't you play the good Samaritan and relieve me of this responsibility? The day I purchased the land I could have gone to City Hall, got a permit and build a commercial building. Today the only permit I can be issued is to build a house on a 2 and 1/2 acre parcel. Wouldn't you say the change is like night and day? You must see the difference.

The 6 lane proposal was only going to Marshall Rd. and you were in favor of that plan. It was not until this became a campaign issue in the last election when, then candidate Cabaldon's slogan was "four lanes on Jefferson, not six," then Cabaldon was successfully elected, and then the people of Jefferson Blvd. appeared at the City Council and told you they did not want 6 lanes, that you and Councilmen Potnick changed your flag midstream. You ran with your tail between your legs to 4 lanes. Don't try to take credit for that, it's hog wash. If there is credit it should to go Councilmen Kristoff and Councilmen Cabaldon. Councilmen Montemayor had to abstain from the vote because his family had property on Jefferson and he had a conflict of interest.

Mayor Beers, you said in your response to my letter that everything I said was a misstatement of the facts. Did the Sacramento Bee, the News-Ledger and the West Sacramento Press headlines misstate the facts. If you would like to call me to discuss the headlines and articles, I am sure they will refresh your memory. You said I am trying to buy the election, money cannot buy the election, only people can elect the candidate. I only want to point out truthfully that you are the wrong candidate, as far as I am concerned, to represent me in West Sacramento for another four years. I leave it up to the voters to recognize who is misstating the facts.

VINCENT FRUGOLI

Where there's smoke. . .

I'm honored that Mr. Cabaldon sent in a rebuttal to the letter I wrote. When an incumbent responds to someone other than his opponent, then it's because that one citizen has touched a very soft spot.

It's amazing that Mayor Beers and Mr. Cabaldon both found that they need defending. There's an old saying that when there's smoke, there's fire. So it looks like the mayor and vice mayor made it more questionable, as to what is really going on.

Mr. Cabaldon, my letter had more to do with what you are doing, not what you have done to me. I will say that you sure know how to twist the truth around. It reminds me of who lives in the White House and another who used to live in there, Slick Willie and Tricky Dick. I would venture to say Mr. Cabaldon is somewhere in the middle.

WILLIAM RESENDEZ

It's too bad that both you and the Mayor did not give more thought about how much money we lost when you two gave our City Hall away; and turned us into rent paying tenants instead of property owners.

Yes, the home we bid for and was approved and bought by four adults, you forgot to mention our 14-year old boy. You question if we are really a family. Mr. and Mrs. National are, our Godparents and the son is my Godson. In the Catholic religion, Mexican and Philippino culture, this makes us a single family. I'm sure you already know this, being of the same background, that is what you claim, but it's within the letter of the law. What I really believe is that you just don't care about senior citizens, Philippinos or Mexican-Americans, because that is who answered the bid for our home. It just so happens that Mr. National is a Philippino Yankee, who served our country during the second world war, and who by an act of Congress and a presidential warrant was made an American.

I'm a Korean War vet. Mr. National is 73-years old and I am going to be 70 years tomorrow. This is really the only reason why I can think of that you held up approval of us buying our home. Thank God we have hard working honest people who work for us! City staff and four other members of the City Council. It had nothing to do with money as everyone knows, the home equity program is in response to the city losing a lawsuit by the state of California. As our city attorney told you at the April meeting, it was a done deal, and the city would be opening itself up for another law suit. (Anyone interested may go to the library and check out a video of that meeting.)

If I had been in Mr. Cabaldon's shoes, I would have been embarrassed, just like when he put his proposal in front of a full council in regards to the motel owners. Everyone told him how wrong it was; his colleagues, the staff, the city attorney, the public, everyone. It seems that this is one man who has outsmarted himself. Why did he not come out with the true explanation to all the money he is getting from across the river, about all those folks walking our streets, knocking on our doors, passing out his propaganda.

Well, slick Willie, tricky Dick, meet crumby Chris. Who am I going to vote for? You guessed it, Marna Miller and Jim Cahill. With Mrs. Miller, I'm sure we would not have given away our City Hall. One think I know, Mrs. Miller does her homework, and will tell us the truth without trying to put honey on it.

One other thing, during the last election you were all over the north side, we have not seen you in two years. You used to make all our events, Cinco De Mayo which is the biggest event on the northside. The only time you come around is when you need our vote. You're not as bad as Mayor Beers, he never comes around. I for one have lost faith and trust in both Mayor Beers and Vice Mayor Cabaldon. Furthermore, Mr. Frugoli is also right on target. On thing about my amigo, he does not lie or twist the truth around. He nor I are running for office; we have almost finished our working careers. Our love for our city and fellow citizens is to see that we get a fair shake from the ones we put in office to take care of what belongs to all of us. Thanks again Mr. Cabaldon for giving me the opportunity to respond to your crafty rebuttal.

Maybe I should put the city seal on this letter. Maybe everyone would believe that this letter can make a difference. Remember I'm not running!

Miller: Cabaldon 'flaunts' system

Neglecting to follow Fair Political Practices Commission rules, while taking advantage of free press "name recognition" tactics, is not my focus today. However, Chris Cabaldon flaunts that he knows that the FPPC will do nothing to him until long after the election, if ever. He is not concerned about making the system more accessible to the average person, or diminishing the money factor. The thing, but they are not. They help special interest groups and they help corporate welfare."

She criticizes the current city council for being out of touch with its public, and accuses it of being in chronic violation of the state's open meeting laws by failing to post a full and detailed agenda in public in advance of council meetings.

"You never have had legal meetings here," she said. "You have never had agendas posted in public for 72 hours in advance." Following complaints by Miller to the county district attorney, the city "miraculously just implemented a new policy and they are now posting the agenda on the front window."

Miller believes that in order "to have a leader who will lead, and not a puppet," the city should implement campaign reforms. Included, she suggests, is a need for the city to help candidates campaign so that candidates do not have to fund raise and become dependent (and obligated to) people with deep pockets.

"You have to allow the public information from more city-sponsored debates, and letters from each candidate should be sent out to the residents paid for by the city," she said. "Newcomers can't afford to raise the $2,000 necessary."

The current council is insulated from the public, she added, and connected to special interests.

"These people are all backed by union members and state workers."

Miller was critical of the city's dependance on its law firm, Kronick, Moskovitz, Tiedemann and Girard. "I think we should have (legal) specialists on an interim basis, or hire a better one. To give a raise to a man who can't win lawsuits is terrible."

Citing the city's handling of the "eminent domain" acquisition of the Kwong property (near the Money Store building), Miller said that "our attorney handled that so poorly."

She believes, however, that West Sacramento's diversified economic base has left it in good overall financial shape.

"The city has always done well fiscally," said Miller. "Our economy is based on industrial and has a very healthy tax base. If we didn't (chronically) get sued and lose, we'd be doing very well."

She said that while some of the city's public safety programs "are really good," the city's disaster preparedness "is not sufficient. We don't have any practice drills or anything like that. We don't have bad levees, but you can always have a quake; we can always have anything."

Miller believes current police chief Larry Gore is not the right man for the job.

"I think we need a different kind of police chief because he's not used to a small city and he's not supportive of neighborhood watch," she commented. Referring to recent drug-related concerns reported by residents of Beardsley Dr., she said that the local police referred them to YONET (the county's drug enforcement task force), while YONET referred the complainers back to the West Sacramento police.

"Some areas of Southport, for instance, get better police service than others, and the state street area tends to get better enforcement. I think there's always room for improvement."

Miller also disagrees with the city's planning practices.

"This zoning rhetoric is pretty much just rhetoric," she said. "Blight (a term used legally to enable the local government to bring about redevelopment efforts) means anything you want. And there is no reason that half of Southport that wants to stay rural can't stay rural, but with everyone paying there own fees."

She questions the city's building fees, citing the example of an acquaintance in North Carolina who builds homes.

"He walks in and pays $700. Why are you (in West Sacramento) charging $35,000 in fees for me to build a house? What for? I want them to prove to me the necessity of those charges."

The current council, she said, "just sort of flows back and forth and people just kind of flip-flop. Chris (Cabaldon) raises objections and then votes yes. They get along, sort of well, but I don't know if it's good for the city. Everything's gray."

And Miller believes West Sacramento should care less about what Sacramento thinks in defining West Sacramento's role in the region.

"Too long in the past, this town has cared what Sacramento thought," she commented. "I think they're icky. I don't like the way their town is run. Sacramento has a seven-year turnover for homes and nobody ever moves from West Sacramento. There's a 31-year turnover in West Sacramento."

That's because this is a good place to live, said Miller.

Miller is on the ballot running against incumbents Wes Beers and Christopher Cabaldon and fellow challenger Jim Cahill for one of two seats on the West Sacramento City Council.

to be "pretty darn good."

"The city's was pretty well off even during the recession," he said. "We have a very diverse revenue base, including business-to-business sales taxes. Coming out of the recession, we're very strong. The civic center project (planned for West Capitol Ave. at Merkley) is an example of that. We're able to do that without any increase in fees or taxes." The project will be financed by a bond package which includes refinancing of other city bond obligations to take advantage of current low interest rates, he explained.

A sound local economy has meant West Sacramento did not feel the same pain in its services as other cities did during the recession of the '90s, Cabaldon added.

"The city has maintained its commitment to basic city services even during tough times. "When times got better, we added additional firefighters, motorcycle officers, et cetera. The police department will finally be able to have a traffic enforcement division -- we just got a grant to be able to put a fully functional traffic enforcement unit together."

The recession did take a toll on the parks department, he added, by forcing budget cuts there while the city tried to maintain its police and fire services.

"The parks and community services department took the brunt of the budget reductions during the recession before I got here (on the council)," he said. "Don Schatzel (the director of the department) has done a good job, setting up programs of mostly 'pay as you go.' In the last two years, times have been better and Don has been able to put some resources back in."

Cabaldon said he and the council view the parks and community services department "almost as a part of the public safety programs. Teenagers have to have something to do," he explained, or else the city would experience more problems which might become law enforcement headaches.

Cabaldon commented on West Sacramento's current city political climate, which early in the city's history polarized some people into camps of "pro-growth" and "anti-growth," or "pro-quality growth" versus "quick profits in development," depending on who was doing the labelling.

"It's not like that any more," Cabaldon said. "The council surely doesn't operate that way. We don't always agree on everything, but there is what I think is a healthy level of tension. There is no clear majority on every issue. You can never predict what the split is going to be on a vote, but all five of us share the same vision. It's how you get there and what the tradeoffs are going to be where we disagree."

Campaigning on a platform in favor of campaign reform in 1996, Cabaldon said the issue has become more difficult than ever.

"The courts keep putting more and more restrictions on what you can do (to reform campaigns)," he said. "People can spend however much they want either on their own behalf or independently on behalf of someone else. (Former candidate for governor Michael) Huffington is a good example of that."

"Wes (Beers, the current mayor) and I were both interested in this subject last year. By the time we were ready to bring some proposals forward, the courts ruled Prop. 208 (a state campaign reform initiative) invalid. There's nothing in the works on this subject on the city level right now."

In the meantime, said Cabaldon, he will be posting his own campaign fund disclosures on the internet (www.cabaldon.org) for public view, but he doesn't see a practical way of requiring that all candidates do the same.

Cabaldon is proud of how West Sacramento's role in the region has developed -- and is even proud when someone from a neighboring community is quoted taking a shot at this town.

"You can see by the criticisms of us and the little barbs in the Bee or from (Sacramento Mayor) Serna that it's a good sign when they disparage our ballpark plans of say they hate the Money Store building. It's a recognition that they see us as a player in the region. We're on the map as an emplcyment center and a development center. Mark (Montemayor, city council member) has become a regional player on water issues. I've been active in studying transportation issues and the Delta."

So the future for West Sacramento in the region looks rosy indeed, Cabaldon believes.

The candidate joins incumbent Wes Beers and challengers Jim Cahill and Marna Miller in the November race for two available seats on the five-member West Sacramento City Council.

basis for my statement is: "No improvement or change to the election process during his two years in office has taken place." That also applies to Wes Beers. Mayor Beers saying that he wants to work closer with the Chamber now that he cannot accept large amounts from Raley's, is also too little too late. Being funded by those who have used us in the past, our tax dollars will continue to be spent on corporate and developer interests rather than equitable improvements throughout the city (sidewalks and lights, etc.). Or, in Chris's case, our city will continue to bow down to the interests of Sacramento and elsewhere.

Yolo DA's Special Services, Mr. Peter Martin, called me about the complaint that I filed, regarding the city not posting the agenda in a public accessible place for 72 continuous hours. For five years, a few of us have been complaining about this. He spoke with the city staff which miraculously started a new policy that day. The agenda will now be posted on the glass front of city hall. A new policy? Let's mention that it has taken 12 years to have them comply with the law which protects the public's rights.

Thanks to Attorney Terry Francke of the California First Amendment Coalition for a lecture on the Brown Act and the question and answer time about problems with cities. The coalition speaks at taxpayer groups, etc., and has a booklet on the Brown Act (public information and rights law) which tells when to write a letter and when to get a lawyer and why, a good speaker (916) 974-8888.

This election period has seen a vast change from the '96 doings. We have almost turned into the brine on the Sacramento side, with controlling the press and the public's lack of information on issues or policies. How many meetings are they able to cancel? I'm looking forward to the October 8 debates.

The Senior Center Peddler's Fair will be on the first Sunday of the month and I will have snow cones as a way to meet and talk with people. Thank you to Frank and Sylvia Davis, among others, as they stopped by and took fliers which got me a big donation from Art Anawalt. Thanks, Art. Thanks to all who took and passed out my fliers.

"Too little too late," is my quote for the incumbents, based on campaign reform and public rights and fairness and accountability in their dealings with residents. Mayor Wes Beers interrupts what I have to say about 20% of the time. He makes a demeaning remark while I am trying to make a point or he waits until I am seated and then asks staff what I said. A good portion of the time my question comes back as something difference or staff change the intention of what I say. "Pay attention or ask me to clarify what I am saying," or discuss the topic with me face to face. Discussing matters is legal and prudent and you hear the differences in ideas. Demeaning an opinion of the public actually violates the Brown Act.

Incumbents seem incapable of finding fault with anything staff does, or even questioning staff when someone from the public makes an allegation about questionable conduct. Why aren't our levee and weir problems repaired. Friends informed me that there is a hold up on paperwork. I called staff over a month ago and staff said there was no problem. Why aren't the repairs done? If you are a disgruntled resident, show yourself at community or council meetings. Then the silent majority would become the voice for higher standards.

Needed: Policies and people that demand accountability from staff and equality in representation. There are different interpretations as to why and who gets what; and who or what area gets enforcement and why. If you are going to pass laws, they need to be enforced equally. If you are going to do something for one group or area, then you need to do the same for similar groups. Good procedures minimize power abuse. Minimizing power builds respect and crates a sense of security for the public. The public then has a reason to trust those representing them.

Eliminate nuclear weapons

(An open letter to Congressman Vic Fazio, Third Congressional District:)

I am writing to ask you to take strong action on 3 very important issues concerned with maintaining peace.

I would like, if I were a retiring Congressperson, to be proud of my accomplishments towards the goals I had set for myself. I hope that a major objective of yours' was legislation toward world peace. I would like to remind you of pending legislative actions that need your support in the quest for world peace.

The danger of world-wide destruction is ever present while nuclear weapons exist. Are you aware of the ever-growing international efforts to, by the year 2000, have plans agreed upon to demolish all nuclear weapons that exist, and end all manufacture of new ones? Our common security requires that complete elimination of nuclear weapons. I hope you will give your full support to Rep. Lynn Woolsey (D-CA) HR 479 which urges the President to initiate multilateral negotiations on the elimination of nuclear weapons. Your name is not on the list of co-sponsors I have recently received.

Urge all in Congress, while appropriations are being considered, to carry out the US' obligation and pay the money it owes to the United Nations. Our country seems to act hypercritically -- on the one hand the US urges the UN to insist on being allowed to inspect Iraq for "weapons of mass destruction." On the other hand the US refuses to pay its debts to the UN. The US owes the UN about $1.5 billion in unpaid assessments (NY Times 9/15/98).

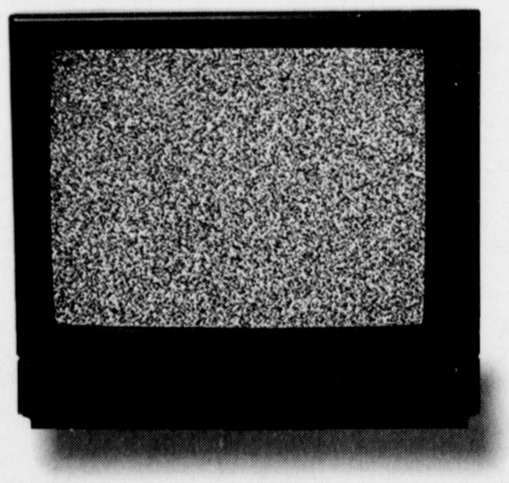
With satellite tv, your local weather always looks like snow.



Poor reception or no reception at all! That's what you'll be getting with a satellite dish if you're looking for local news, programming and up-to-the-minute local weather. Or you could resort to using rabbit ears to get your reception. So make the clear choice. Get cable tv connected throughout your house.
